6 Tips to Escape the Tourist Crowds in Washington, D.C.

Kirsten Ballard
Updated: 16 April 2018

Annually, an estimated 22 million people visit the nation's capital. The Cherry Blossom Festival alone sees an average of 1.5 million visitors over the four-week period. To put that in perspective, just over half a million people actually reside within D.C. on a 'normal day.' Nothing ruins a vacation like weaving among

Instead of fighting the crowds around the Tidal Basin, enjoy scenic waterfront views of the blossoms from this quiet alcove. The grove was erected in honor of the 36th president and was one of his and Lady Bird Johnson's favorite spots to stroll and get away from the pressures of D.C. This quiet oasis is

AVOID THE FASHION CENTRE AT PENTAGON CITY

Shop

When you come to D.C., hit the National Mall instead of this behemoth shopping center. With four floors of shops and department stores, it's a trap for visiting high-schoolers and youths. You can shop at home or online and eat at one of D.C.'s famous restaurants instead of the food court.

Most of the monuments and memorials are open 24 hours a day. Skip the crowds and head to the mall after dark. You'll miss the tour groups and throngs of families – and there's something magical about the Jefferson at night.

Book your stay in North D.C.

Get out of the hustle and bustle – look for hotels or AirBnBs in Columbia Heights, Petworth, and Woodley Park. These smaller neighborhoods have great rentals and are far less crowded than staying in the Arlington area.

While Washington, D.C. is known for the big three: Lincoln, Washington and Jefferson, it offers many more presidential landmarks. Find peace and serenity away from the crowded mall at the FDR memorial. The man-made waterfalls offer a soothing change of pace from the honking of cabs around the District.
